Moderator: David Stern, BBC

The long waited ceasefire was announced on September 6 but the main question is, still, whether it can hold long? Presidents Poroshenko and Putin seems wanting peace but would like to see their own terms meet. Both, but especially Ukraine's Poroshenko is under great domestic pressure. What the separatists end game, though, and what they have the capacity for is remaining a question. There are now not only indications but enough evidence that Russia not only continues to support separatists but also sending their regular troops into east Ukraine. On the Ukraine side the lack of integration, coordination between volunteer battalions and the army as well as the state of army seems the main issue. This panel will focus on the latest developments in Eastern Ukraine, will try to put the east Ukraine question into a national, regional and global context and will analyse Russia's strategic objectives for a post-crisis scenario.

16.15 – 17.45 UKRAINE AND THE REFORM CHALLENGE

Moderator: Roland Kovats, Senior Fellow, Centre for Euro-Atlantic Integration and Democracy, Hungary

Although Ukraine has signed Association Agreement with the EU not its ratification or any longer its implementation the main challenge. Fresh calculations are much less optimistic about what economic gains can the agreement bring to Ukraine as the country is facing a financial and economic breakdown. Far reaching but painful reforms to re-build the broke down central and regional authorities, patience, time and much more Western assistance would be needed to cover the costs of transition as originally thought. What is feasible for Ukraine at this stage what it can expect from the EU in its reform process? What role the AA and the EU can play the changed circumstances? Is Western assistance covering Ukraine current needs? What is the role of civil society in reforms? How to score a balance between the costs and the benefits of Ukraine's reforms? What role Russia can play in these efforts?
